Training Programme 2008-2009

"Excellent resources introducing loads of new ideas...very well supported in every way"

"This has enthused me with e-learning and I am eager to start cascading"

"Excellent trainers with great knowledge in the area of e-learning"

E-Guides is delivered on behalf of the Quality Improvement Agency (QIA) as part of the Teaching and Learning Programme

What are the benefits of the programme?

The E-Guides training programme is a thorough introduction to e-learning. Participants develop hands-on skills for integrating technology into teaching and learning in post-16 education. The programme materials, extensively revised and updated for 2008, are designed to be used and repurposed by E-Guides when cascading their skills and knowledge to colleagues within their organisations.

- E-Guides learn new teaching approaches and perspectives to share with their subject colleagues that will engage learners more effectively: leading to better retention, motivation, completion, attainment and achievement
- The programme enables ongoing networking, support from communities of practice, and access to further training events
- A certificate and a portfolio recording learning during the programme may provide evidence towards Continuing Professional Development
- Optional accreditation through the EDI Level 3 Certificate in Educational Use of ICT
- Small grants may be available in support of follow-up activity linked to programme attendance

Who can be an E-Guide?

The training is aimed at all staff, paid and unpaid, in post-16 education who are involved with the delivery of learning across different subjects and areas of learning. This includes staff from LSC funded learning providers in Voluntary & Community Sector organisations, Workers' Education Association, staff in Offender Learning and Skills, Work Based Learning organisations, Local Authorities and FE colleges.

E-Guides need to be confident in their use of ICT, enthusiastic about e-learning, willing to champion change and able to work well with colleagues.
